Learn About Bad Ozone!
While you're making efforts for cleaner air, it's a great time to understand "bad" ozone. Unlike the protective ozone layer high above us, ground-level ozone is a harmful air pollutant that forms on hot, sunny days from vehicle exhaust, industrial emissions, and other sources. It can impact on our respiratory health and is a key component of smog. By participating in Clean Air BINGO, you're directly helping to reduce the precursors that form this unhealthy ozone!

Wildfire smoke isn't just a nuisance — it contains harmful particles and gases that can affect everyone's health, especially those most vulnerable. The good news? There are simple steps you can take right now to prepare. Here's how to get started:

Tune Up Your HVAC: Make sure your home's cooling system is ready.

Create a Cleaner Air Room: Designate one room in your home—like your bedroom or living room—as your clean air space.

Stay Informed: Air quality can change rapidly during wildfire season.
